

Quebec's legendary alpacas

are one focus of 'agri-tourism' in the province

Joint owner of the alpaca farm, Lise, (left) helps to deliver an alpaca baby.

During a recent visit to an alpaca farm in Quebec, I was presented with a pair of socks, made from alpaca fibre. Since such socks are not available in stores, this was a unique present.

Beekeeper-owner Jacques displays a beehive where bees live in a natural habitat.

Who are the alpacas, was my question? Alpacas are domesticated species of South America, resembling a small llama in appearance, belonging to the camel family — the difference being that while llamas are used as pack animals, alpacas are raised mainly for their soft wool. There are no wild llamas or alpacas.

I was able to enrich my knowledge of alpacas during a recent visit to Les Alpaga ferme Norli, an alpaca farm operated by the husband and wife team, Lise and Normand Pollender, in Quebec's eastern townships, a few hours' drive from Quebec City. The couple whose passion has always been agriculture and animals, ended by specializing in alpaca breeding and manufacturing products from their fine quality fibres.

"I saw an alpaca for the first time during an agricultural exhibition in 2000. I immediately fell in love with these little animals, as much for the softness of their character as the quality of their fiber," remembers Lise. The couple, who are also staunch pet lovers and fourth-generation farmers, have over 100 different types of alpacas.

On a tour of the farm, Lise mentioned in passing that one of the female alpacas in her herd of 100 might deliver a baby while we were there. The news was received with a lot of excitement among the group, especially photo journalists, for whom this would be a once in a lifetime experience.

We continued touring the farm and taking pictures of groups of alpacas wandering around, eating grass and involved in various other activities. The farm also has a boutique where different merchandize made from alpaca hair is displayed and offered for sale to the public.

"The boutique offers knitting yarn from our alpacas, spun directly in our spinning mill as well as knitwear for the whole family made by us and our knitters," Lise proudly explained. For the home, one can buy beautiful rugs, bedspreads and cushions or gifts of scarfs or caps for the family.

Alpaca wool has unique characteristics as it is five times warmer and lighter than sheep's wool, and is considered a luxury fiber. Its quality even surpasses that of the Kashmir and its fiber comes in over 22 natural colors which can be produced by mixing these fibers.

Our tour was interrupted when a staff member came running to inform us that the pregnant alpaca was ready to deliver. We all scrambled to secure a good vantage point to mark the occasion. Lise, accompanied by three staff, at once took charge of the operation, surrounding the expectant mother, forming a maternity team.

Birth of a child is an occasion for celebration and merriment. It's also considered a good omen. To my utter amazement, I found out that even some animals celebrate a birth same as human beings do.

The new-born alpaca is carried to its mother by a staff member of the farm.

Lise explained that the alpaca fiber is elastic, resistant and thermal, making it perfect for different climates. "An item of alpaca wool clothing will maintain its corporal temperature in any type of environment. Its natural shine and its smoothness produces high quality wool, ideal for the textile industry especially as alpaca blankets," she said.

Excited by the unique experience, we continued our tour of nature by visiting a captivating guided tour focussing on the life of bees and honey production. The Miellerie Lune de Miel, located just five minutes from Sherbrooke, offers tours of the fascinating world of bees and honey. Here, one can watch bees in action and listen to a professional beekeeper unravel the mysterious behaviour of bees and explain the honey

Lake Massawippi is very popular among water sport enthusiasts and boaters.

*Story and photos
by Mansoor Ladha
Page design and layout
by Winifred Ribeiro*

extraction process.

"Beekeeping at Lune de Miel has not changed. Our philosophy has remained the same since the beginning — which is the use of hives and frames made of natural wood and the freedom given to bees to completely fabricate their cells by producing their own wax, just as in their natural habitat," explained the beekeeper-owner Jacques.

Despite suffering from diabetes, I couldn't resist tasting 15 varieties of honey. One can find a variety of wrappings, candles, royal jelly, pollen, beauty products, and many souvenirs at their gift boutique. It's definitely a fun place to visit for the entire family.

Quebec's Eastern Townships, are full of breathtaking scenery, picturesque villages and towns offering a warm welcome to visitors. Their tourist attractions and activities would fill your days, providing cozy accommodation and unique gourmet experiences. Tourists are bound to take precious memories home.

There's so much to discover and learn about Quebec products, that you'll need to take to the road and make the acquaintance of the farmers and artisans who shape and transform Quebec with such passion.

Today there are so many vineyards, wineries, cheese makers, maple groves and sugar shacks, farms, honey producers, microbreweries and more, which fill the province's pantries. These operations also supply restaurants, specialty grocery stores and boutiques with tasty Quebec products.

Also, deserving mention are the farmers and artisans who process goat's milk, lavender, emu oil, mohair and alpaca

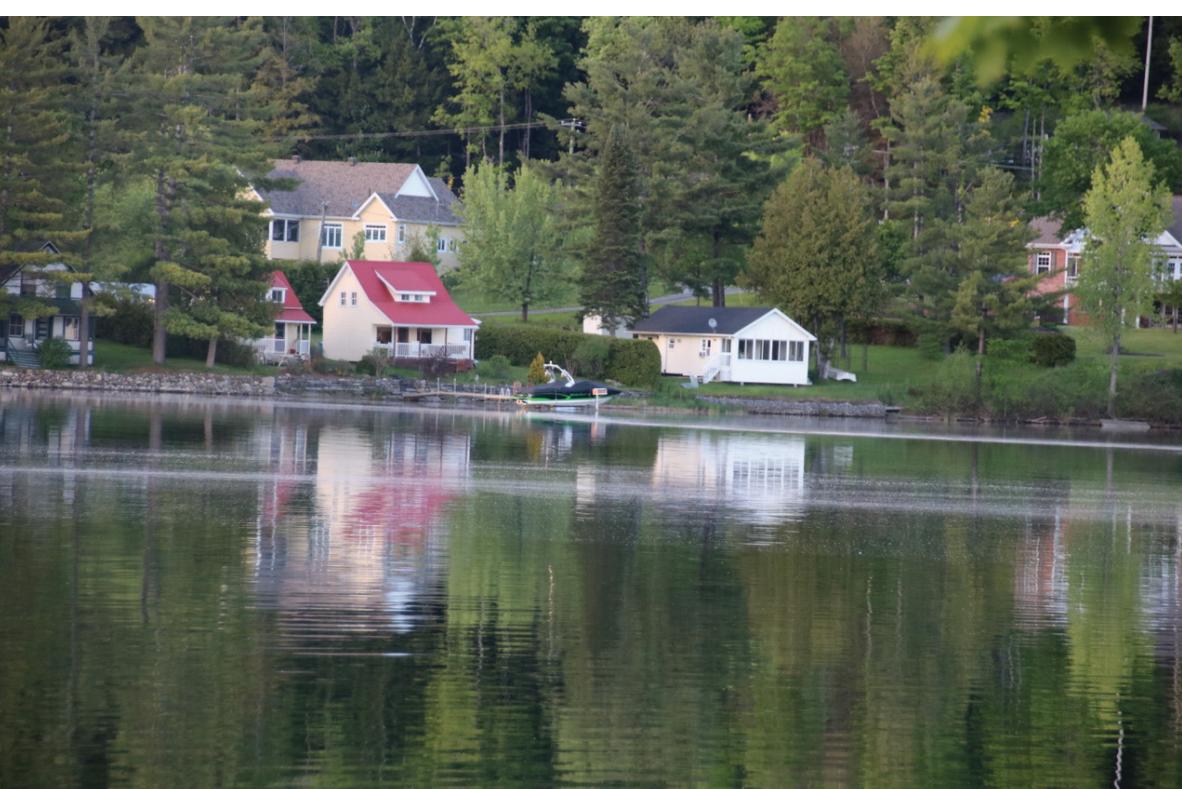

A couple relax in the outdoor hot tub at Hotel Ripplecove.

A burning fire and tranquil atmosphere is offered at Auberge Ripplecove, a hotel located on shores of Lake Massawippi.

Breathtaking scenery like this is everywhere in Quebec's Eastern Townships.

Lake Massawippi provides an ideal vacation spot for Quebec City residents who own cottages on the lake.